10. Please describe why you're interested in serving on this board or commission High rates of untreated and undertreated behavioral health problems have been a fact of life in the U.S. for many years, leading to significant human suffering. The disconnect between need and available resources has only grown in recent years. Currently, the substance use epidemic is placing enormous strain on our entire society, and is only growing in size and complexity. It is critical that we use what resources we have to address these problems as effectively and efficiently as possible. I look forward to working with other community members to sustain current programs as well as develop new responses.
