

Appendix A SECONDARY RESEARCH SUMMARY (DISCOVERY)

History

The idea of building an improved jail facility to address jail overcrowding had been around for nearly a decade before the voters approved a 2005 sales tax to fund a new jail. In 2011, the Jail Planning Task Force was established to work on the size and quality of new jail facilities in Whatcom County. One year after its establishment, it announced a goal of building a new and larger jail with 500 to 700 beds, in comparison to the current facility originally built for 148 beds that has been adjusted over time to its current capacity of 212 beds. In 2013, the County purchased a plot of land in Ferndale for $6.1 million for the new jail facility. However, the County needed voter approval to fund this large-scale project. In 2015, the County proposed a 0.2% increase in sales tax, which voters ultimately rejected. After hearing feedback from residents, Whatcom County created the Incarceration Prevention and Reduction Task Force (IPRTF). The purpose of the IPRTF is to continually review Whatcom County's criminal justice and behavioral health programs and make specific recommendations to safely and effectively reduce incarceration of individuals struggling with mental illness and chemical dependency and minimize jail utilization by pretrial defendants who can safely be released. However, it is unclear how much awareness the community had about the creation of this task force to tackle issues that matter to them. Voters again struck down a second ballot proposal in 2017, the substance of which was essentially the same as the first measure but referred to the measure as a "Public Safety and Jail Facilities Sales & US tax." The County wanted to understand why they could not rally the public's support and conducted a listening tour in 2018 to get community feedback. Two years later, Whatcom County created the Law Enforcement Assisted Diversion (LEAD) program, a collaborative effort to offer people with behavioral health issues who have committed low-level law violations a path out of the criminal justice system and into intensive case management. A related program was also established, the Ground-Level Response and Coordinated Engagement (GRACE) program, which is a communitybased effort to find solutions for individuals who are high utilizers of emergency and criminal justice systems. The aim of GRACE is to offer intensive, coordinated services to these "familiar faces" whose needs span beyond any single agency.

Incarceration Prevention and Reduction Task Force (IPRTF)

As stated above, the IPRTF makes specific recommendations to safely and effectively reduce incarceration of individuals struggling with mental illness and chemical dependency and minimize jail utilization. As of 2019, the IPRTF also serves as the Law and Justice Council for Whatcom County. Four subcommittees comprise the Task Force, and each committee serves a different purpose for the community:

- The Behavioral Health Subcommittee recommends new programs or improvements to minimize incarceration of people struggling with mental health and substance use disorders.
- The Crisis Stabilization Facility Subcommittee makes recommendations to the Task Force to construct a new and improved crisis triage facility to serve as an alternative to the hospital or arrest for mental health problems. The Crisis Stabilization Center opened in October 2020 and the subcommittee continues to meet to discuss elements of the facility and its services.

- The Information Needs and Data Exchange (INDEX) Subcommittee was created in 2018 to use data to inform policymakers in their decision-making process to minimize jail use and improve efficiency within the system.
- The Legal & Justice Subcommittee recommends specific, achievable programs and services that would prevent or reduce incarceration.

Since the release of the Vera Institute Report on Jail Reduction Strategies (outlined in the following section) in 2017, the Incarceration Prevention and Reduction Task Force has implemented many improvements to Whatcom County's incarceration system, including:

- GRACE Program
- LEAD Program
- Behavioral health-trained law enforcement programs
- Enhanced Drug Court and Mental Health Court
- Efforts to reduce warrants
- Superior Court Pretrial Services Unit
- Implementation of a Superior Court Pretrial Risk Assessment Tool
- New Crisis Stabilization Center
- Supportive recovery housing for Drug Court participants and others

Vera Institute Report on Jail Reduction Strategies

In 2017, the County hired the Vera Institute to conduct in-depth research on the demographics of Whatcom County residents and the incarcerated population, and eventually present strategies and recommendations for the County to implement to reduce the number of incarcerated people.

The Vera Institute made five recommendations, each with its own key findings, challenges, and strategies:

- Reduce unnecessary jail bookings.
- Curtail the number of new and outstanding warrants for lower-level charges
- Create a pretrial release process that is individualized and based on data-driven risk assessment.
- Develop a case-flow management plan to reduce time to disposition and shorten people's length-of-stay.
- Create oversight and accountability mechanisms to ensure successful and sustained jail population reduction.

County Council Criminal Justice and Public Safety Committee Listening Tour

After the second ballot measure failed in 2017, the County wanted to better understand why voters opposed the proposal and what facilities or programs they want implemented into the local incarceration system.

Demographics

The Listening Tour gathered basic statistics about participants:

- 115 unique individuals participated in a live listening tour session
 - o 101 individuals participated in an in-person online questionnaire
 - o 94.6% white
 - o 72% were at least 50 years old
 - o 49% women, 48% men, and 3% unidentifiable
- 693 people completed an online questionnaire and did not attend a session
 - o 83.8% white
 - o 56% were at least 50 years old
 - o 66% women, 28% men, and 6% unidentifiable

Clearly, the lack of participant diversity demonstrates that the Listening Tour was not very representative of the County population and, more importantly, it was not representative of the incarcerated population. In 2018, the Whatcom County Jail population was 63% white and 37% people of color, while the Listening Tour had an audience of about 95% white participants. Therefore, there is a significant demographic difference between Listening Tour participants and incarcerated people.

Opinions on a new facility

Two opinions held true among most of the respondents: they want the facility to be a safe and humane place for inmates and workers, and they believe the current infrastructure issues with the jail must be addressed. As for the location, many people believed that it should be in Bellingham, closer to resources and services that are relevant to inmates as opposed to Ferndale; however, the County has already purchased the land in Ferndale. The size of the facility was also a major point of contention among respondents; most did not approve of a larger jail because they are worried it will lead to increased incarcerations in the County. Residents were split between having a jail of equal size with a different utilization of the space and a smaller one with less room for incarcerations. Support for funding the project also varied among participants, with a disagreement between whether sales tax or property tax should be drawn from. A strong opinion held by most of the group is that for-profit entities should not be contracted to manage the jail, but many also believed that funding a new facility would be a better use of funds instead of trying to repair the current one.

Aside from the major points above, respondents proposed other ideas on how to best use the space:

- The women's section of the jail should be moved to the underutilized juvenile section.
- There should be two separate jails: one for violent offenders and one for nonviolent offenders.
- Space should be made for rehabilitation purposes, such as classrooms, quiet spaces, and opportunities to work in the kitchen, garden, etc.
- The former St. Luke's building can be used to increase drug/alcohol and mental health treatment beds.

Who should be in jail?

Overall, respondents believe violent offenders who are likely to commit another crime should be incarcerated. Additionally, participants listed white collar criminals, rapists, and child molesters as people who should be in jail. As for who should not be in jail, most agreed that non-violent people suffering from addiction and mental health issues should be in rehabilitation facilities instead of jail. The homeless population, especially youth, should be in alternative facilities as well. Respondents also believe that it is unjust to jail people who are in pretrial, do not have the means to pay bail, or cannot afford their fines so are then placed into custody.

Problems with the system

As demonstrated by the two previous measures being struck down, Whatcom County residents have many qualms about how the current incarceration system is designed. To rally support behind a new facility, respondents want to see the County address the systemic issues at hand instead of simply increasing the size of the jail. As a nation, the United States has the highest incarceration rate of any country. Residents are not keen on contributing to this statistic and therefore oppose more space to incarcerate additional people. The Listening Tour participants also reiterated that the system targets low-income and BIPOC (Black, Indigenous, and People of Color) communities, perpetuating a cycle of poverty and racial discrimination. They believe that jail is traumatizing, not a beneficial alternative to homelessness, and impacts the entire family, not just the incarcerated person. Lastly, about two-thirds of people in jail are pretrial and could potentially be innocent. As a result, there is a need for more beds which leads to overcrowding of the facility.

Next steps

Respondents emphasized two main requests for the incarceration system: they want to see rehabilitation and treatment as opposed to punishment, and they want to implement programs that address the root causes of incarceration

Moving forward, all participants mentioned the importance of using data to guide the County's decisions. Many of them echoed that the measure did not seem to be data-driven, so they do not trust that a new facility is needed. The Vera Institute study addresses ways in which the County can decrease incarceration levels, and residents would like to see the County act on those suggestions. Informing the public on how funds will be used is another important point - they do not want their taxes to increase as part of an arbitrary plan.
